ABOUT PAMELA

Pamela Furr is a passionate speaker and a nationally recognized leader in neurodiversity, human potential, and inclusive education. Drawing from her own life and years of hands-on experience, Pamela believes every person deserves the chance to thrive. When her children needed support that didn't exist, she created:

- Schools
- Therapeutic programs
- Community organizations
- And More

Transforming the landscape for families who had nowhere else to turn. Pamela's presentations blend neuroscience, behavioral insights, and practical strategies that audiences can use right away. She shared her message on TEDx stages, at major events in Dubai and Las Vegas, at FACTS Elevate, and for organizations across the country. Her talks are honest, energizing, and grounded in real-world experience, leaving people inspired and ready to act.

As the author of "Can You Hear Me Now," Pamela offers a heartfelt perspective on understanding behavior, communication, and connection. Her storytelling is raw and relatable, giving readers and audiences a fresh lens through which to see themselves, their loved ones, and their teams.

Pamela's mission is simple: empower families, teachers, and leaders. Whether supporting parents on the edge of burnout, educators striving to meet diverse needs, or organizations looking for better ways to help their teams, Pamela gives people the tools to read what's happening beneath the surface—so they can respond with purpose rather than react out of fear.

Her message is direct. Her story is lived. Her work is changing the way people understand the mind, the nervous system, and the environments that shape us all.
